Federal Student Loans vs. Private Loans

Federal Student Loans (loans from the government or guaranteed by the government)	Private Student Loans (Nonfederal loans from a bank, credit union, or other financial institution).
You will not have to start repaying your federal student loans until you graduate, leave school, or change your enrollment status to less than half-time.	Many private student loans require payments while you are still in school.
The interest rate is fixed and is often lower than private loans - and much lower than some credit card interest rates. View the current interest rates on federal student loans : https://studentaid.ed.gov/types/loans/interest-rates	Private student loans can have variable interest rates greater than 18 percent .
Undergraduate students with financial need will likely qualify for a subsidized loan where the government pays the interest while you are in school on at least a half-time basis.	Private student loans are not subsidized.
You don't need to pass a credit check to get a federal student loan (except for PLUS loans). Federal student loans help you establish a good credit record.	Private student loans may require an established credit record. The cost of a private student loan depends on your credit score, which you may not yet have as a student.
You won't need a co-signer in most cases.	You may need a co-signer.
Some interest is tax deductible.	Interest may not be tax deductible.
Loans can be consolidated into a Direct Consolidation Loan. Learn about your consolidation options: https://studentaid.ed.gov/repay-loans/consolidation	Private student loans cannot be consolidated into a Direct Consolidation Loan.

Effective February 14, 2010, the Federal Reserve Board approved final rules on Regulation Z* (Truth in Lending Act) that revises the disclosure requirements for private education loans. Private education loans will not include some institutional loans such as tuition payment plans, most short-term institutional loans, or the Emergency Payment option.

Under the new laws, a lender offering private loans for postsecondary educational expenses must first provide a disclosure about loan terms and features at the time of application and must disclose information about federal student loan programs that may offer less costly alternatives. If the initial application reaches an approval status, a second loan disclosure statement must be provided to the student at that time. If a student accepts the loan terms provided in the second disclosure statement, a third final disclosure must be provided when the loan is consummated.

A lender must also provide the student with a 3 day rescission or "Right-to-Cancel" period after the final loan disclosure form is sent to the student. The Right-to-Cancel period means that once HPU has certified your loan and all disclosures are sent, there is a mandatory 3 business day waiting period before the lender may disburse loan funds to the school. Note: If a lender only offers a mailed Final Disclosure (not online), then they must wait 6 days to disburse the loan to the school (3 days for mail time and an additional 3 day rescission or "right-to-cancel" period).
